

Warning Siren

During World War II, warning sirens were used to alert people of danger. These sirens were found on top of schools, churches, post offices, and government buildings. They made loud noises so people knew when danger was coming or when it was safe. Schools practiced warning siren drills so they knew what to do in case of an emergency.